Whisky Manufacture From Barrel Staves Handicapped

Chicago, Ill., July 13.—Manufacture of whisky from staves of barrels in which whisky had been aged received a jolt from federal judys Landis Friday. Judge Landis dismissed the suit of the Western Extraction company against the collector of internal revenue. Barrel stave whisky is made by extracting from the staves the whisky which the barrel has absorbed, and adding elochel. Two years ago the internal revenue collector ruled that firms making this kind of whisky would have to prove a tax was paid on the whinksy which the barrels comitained or pay a second tax. The order virtually feroed the companies out of business, it is said, and an injunction restraining the government from enforcing the order was sought.

A QUIET HOME BY THE SEA

Some people like the publicity furnished by the average hotel lobby, and the seneral air of pleasurable confusion. Others prefer conditions as quiet and elegant as in their own homes. To the latter class will appeal particularly the combination of small hotel and bungalows known as El Mirabol at Santa Barbara. Here people will live in their own houses, which they may have made into any desired arrangement of suits, always with private entrance and hall. Menls may be taken in their own apartments or in the main dining room, as they may desired. The grounds are beautifully laid out and two country-clubs are nearby.
